> THE COST OF WAR (Atlanta Journal)

A learned and ingenious Frenchman, M. Camille Flamman) w. has made an estimate of the cost of war in men and money to civilized nations during the last hundred years. Some of his figures are very interest-

Some of his figures are very interesting:

The Franco-German was of 1870-71 caused the death, M. Flammarion tells us of 250,000 men. In the Crimean war of 1854-55 785,000 llv:s were lost. The brief Italian war of 1859 brought about the death of 69,000 men in battle or in hospitals, and even the "game of chess" botween Russia and Austria, in 1866, deprived 46,000 men of their lives. Our civil war in 1861-65 meant death to 450,000 men—an enormous host. The wars waged by the great Napoleon caused the death of no tess than 5,000,000 ed the death of no less than 5,000,000 persons 2 1 v

The effect of the war on the Federal debt was to increase it from $65,000,000 to $2,773,235,173. Several billions of property besids were distributed in the South, and the paralysis of industry consequent upon the civil war destroyed billions more, delaying the full economic deviations of this section by over thirty years.

But the evils of the war are not to be measured by the loss of men and property, enormous as they are. A writer in the New York Evening Post says:

"War leaves the seeds of various moral and economic discusses. From considering what is the right phing to do the people fall to discussing simply what their newly prayed strength will enably them to do, and the londest braggart them to do, and the londest braggart them to do, and the londest braggart becomes the most Papular statesman. In business, values become utterly un-trustworthy. The debasement of the currency, which is almost always a feacurrency, which is almost always a feature of prelonged warfaire, makes it extered to be a firm financial foundation again, because the fictitious inflation of values has unsettled the public judgment. Every attempt at contraction is resented by all who have anything for sale, because they do not stop to consider the compensating advantages of the lower prices they may ray when they have anything to buy. These illustrations must be familiar to all Americans who are eld enough to have lived through the civil war and witnessed the struggles of the nation to get back to its

gies of the nation to get back to its old maorings, even after poace had reigned for more than thirty years." It is sometimes necessary for a na-tion to fight to maintain its honor or to protect its interests, but most of the wars of the world have been waged without just provocation.
